

Half of CIA Is Moved To Langley

CPYRIGHT

FAIRFAX — The new Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) head quarters is growing into a good concern. About half of the Washington-based staff has moved to the Langley facility.

Col. Stanley Grogan, assistant to the CIA director, said operations in one main building are underway, and finishing touches are being put on to the other principal structure.

Just how many persons constitute "half" of the employees is — like most other facts about the super-secret CIA — classified. Previously published estimates range from 3,500 to 40,000.

It would be easy to put 3,500 people in the facility, but a pretty good trick to get 40,000.
